This book is about the use of legal scholarship by judges. It discusses the possibility that legal scholarship may function as a genuine source of law in modern municipal legal systems. This type of scholarship will be called “standard” legal scholarship; it might also be described as “legal dogmatics,” a term commonly used in the civil law world. The chapter goes on to discuss—and reject—some arguments to the effect that legal scholarship (standard scholarship included) cannot or does not function as a source of law.
