Competition Versus Cooperation. An economy comprising many more small units of production and increasingly few mega-corporates would be a safer place for more people to do business. The urge to compete is reinforced by a fear of failure, which can mean exclusion, poverty and lifelong insecurity. Deals with competition and cooperation as antithetical approaches to human interaction in the social field. This innovative study advocates a new and difference perspective on the joined disciplines of history, economic theory, and the social sciences. The Competition Cooperation Project supports dialogues between competition officials from the EU and Asia through Competition Weeks, Competition Summer School and the Visitors Programme.
